

Unwanted Christmas presents = Hope for the Homeless

A dress you never wanted, flowered cutlery that spoils your appetite, the twentieth pair of socks... If you got Christmas presents you really don't need this year – don't throw them away! Donate them to homeless charity Anchor House instead and help people in need.

Sadly, this year 35,680 households in the UK were deemed homeless – without food, shelter and support. By selling your unwanted Christmas presents on eBay, Anchor House will raise money to sponsor rooms for these people. Alternatively, you can also sell your own items and choose Anchor House to receive a donation from the proceeds.

However, if you are perfectly happy with all your presents, you can simply donate some money to the London-based charity, which provides accommodation for up to 180 single homeless people each year, as well as accredited vocational training courses in construction, electrical, plumbing and distance learning for both residents and the local community.
